MATERIAL AVAILABLE FOR GENEALOGICAL RESEARCH IN THE ST. LOUIS PUBLIC LIBRARY.

By Katharine Twining Moody, Reference Librarian.

INTRODUCTION.

In creating a genealogical reference library it has been necessary to obtain, first of all, works of a general nature—files of genealogical magazines, visitations and standard town histories rather than individual family genealogies.

Today, although it is true that this collection still lacks important sets, it has reached a point in its development where fairly satisfactory research is possible.

Naturally, in view of the fact that acquisitions are constantly being received, this list must serve merely as a basis or guide. Since, however, current additions to the collection are listed in the Library's Monthly Bulletins, persons interested may, with little trouble, possess an up-to-date catalogue. It is, of course, impossible to mention all titles which afford genealogical information, for most biographies and histories might be included.

Contrary to the custom of many libraries the greater part of the collection here listed is kept upon open shelves in the Reference Room. Such easy access arouses much favorable comment for reasons easily understood. It scarcely needs to be urged that a small collection used exhaustively is more satisfactory than resources inaccessible and material unsuspected.

Genealogy is the one class of literature impartially handled—no work ever becomes out of date; its style is never questioned; not one volume may be disregarded by the pedigree hunter, for in the most unlooked-for spot the elusive fact may be stumbled upon.

To the uninitiated it may be surprising to learn that family histories are by no means the sum total of material necessary in genealogical work.

Long files of state archives serve to locate geographically families whose migrations are uncertain; moreover, they give accurate data regarding the public services of individuals.

Military rosters of the United States and of the several states, and pension rolls, are in demand to prove eligibility for membership in the various patriotic societies, while the membership rolls of these very organizations are trails already blazed, with which others may easily connect.

Town and county histories abound in valuable material; lists of immigrants to the United States in colonial days, church records of baptisms and marriages, collections of wills, municipal publications listing births, deaths and marriages—all furnish welcome information.

Many colleges are issuing biographical lists of graduates, full of data, and, of course, general biographical encyclopedias are useful in tracing descent.

Sometimes a date, a name or a place will present the necessary clue; all else failing, directories of cities and membership-lists of societies will indicate the whereabouts of individuals bearing the family name, suggesting the fact that information may be obtained through them.

By means of the heralds' visitations and notes of those who have delved upon English soil, it is possible to trace many families to the days of the Conqueror, and, if we may accept the records of the nobility, indefinitely beyond.

In short, an extended genealogical quest, in its ingenuity, will often require the detective genius of a Sherlock Holmes.

Persons having family records are invited to place manuscript copies in this Library. If preferred, the Library will make photostatic copies of manuscript or printed charts and will return the originals. The preservation of many valuable records will then be permanently assured.

established their right to bear arms. In his preface the author says: "The arms-bearing families in the United States are principally those who trace their origin to the Knickerbocker families of New York, the Cavaliers of the South, the Puritans of New England, the Quakers of Pennsylvania and the Huguenot exiles of noble blood. It must be remembered that the early settlers, although often styled merchants and yeoman, were mostly men of good family, their seals and much of the plate brought with them from the Old World being engraved with their Arms. . . . All persons who can deduce descent from an ancestor whose armorial ensigns have been acknowledged in any one of the Visitations, are entitled to carry those Arms by right of inheritance."

"A loyalist history of the subject of which it treats, not an English account," the preface states. The author was a graduate of Yale, class of 1750, clerk of Queens County, recorder of New York City and, in 1776, was Judge of the Supreme Court when he was arrested by order of the provincial congress for failing to acknowledge his fidelity to the American cause; he was sent to Connecticut as a prisoner of war, and finally exchanged for a prisoner held by the British. This history was written between the years 1783 and 1788 in England, where the author died in 1792. He mentions many loyalists and the editor includes notes upon the De Lancey, Livingston, Andre, Arnold and other families.
